2.

Upon extending his judicial contract at the age of 70 for two more years in 1990, his canvas was as large, his interests as wide, his commitment as tough and demanding while remaining ever gracious, caring and humane! In recent years he had resumed study of Latin endeavouring presumably to keep the discipline of faith amidst turbulent and changing times; and where legal development and principle, logic and precedent still claim their rightful place and proper moral function:

His Honour died peacefully in the early hours of Saturday 6 October 2012 at the Hospice of St Vincent’s Hospital, Sydney. Family and friends gathered at a Service of Thanksgiving for the judge’s rich life and wonderful service to law and the community at St Mark’s Anglican Church, Darling Point on Friday 12 October 2012.
